

Thirteen Ways of Looking at TheBus

Poetry. Asian American Studies. In THIRTEEN WAYS OF LOOKING AT THE BUS, Gizelle Gajelonia discovers her muse in Honolulu's TheBus mass transit system. She takes seriously (in this seriously funny chapbook) the notion of routes--routes through Hawaii's history and geography, routes through American poetry, routes through languages spoken in Hawaii. Many of the pieces parody canonical poems by T.S. Eliot, Wallace Stevens, Hart Crane, Elizabeth Bishop, John Ashbery, and Eric Chock. Out of her parodies come marvelous revisions. Among the figures included in Gajelonia's revised canon are Hawaii's last queen, Liliuokalani, Filipina nurses, and an honors thesis writer very like the author who dreams of Columbia University.
