

Exile at Dawn (Green People Chronicles Book 2)

The worst fears of responsible scientists have materialized: gifted but egomaniacal Neil Holmes has used available technology to change the human genome. His infection killed most of his unknowing victims and transformed the survivors into a new type of human. The origin of these Greens (who can produce food by photosynthesis) is described in the novel Becoming Green. This is the prelude to Exile at Dawn and the first book in the Green People Chronicles. In Exile at Dawn, the entire Green population has been relocated to a remote internment camp located in Aurora, Nevada, at the remote site of the Old West town where Mark Twain once tried gold mining. Young Tom and Gloria come of age and fall in love in Camp Aurora, while Tom's sister Lilly becomes pregnant and gives birth to Adam, the first Green baby. The human desires for freedom and romantic love place these Greens in mortal danger.

The lives and loves of these and other Greens unfold under threat: because Greens are infectious and can reproduce, they would eventually become the predominant human species and we would become extinct. This poses a moral and existential dilemma: should we commit genocide of the Greens, or can some other solution be found? Tom, Gloria, Lilly, and Adam don't wait for their fate to be decided by far-away politicians. Exile at Dawn describes their struggles to shape their own lives and save their people.
