

I, Gray Wolf

Do not judge others by their fur, my son, Defender said as he stood and walked to the entrance of the cave. Low One is being punished for a crime which he was fairly found guilty of. I have no doubt that he would deceive you any way he could merely for this reason. I favor you as heir to the pack, and he knows that. I acknowledge this prospect as well, but is it beyond possibility that he merely wants me to give him justice? I asked, now becoming a little agitated myself. I will put very few things beyond possibility, but I refuse to believe that Low One is innocent. I do not like to believe it either; he was my Beta, and a good friend, but I must make my judgment based upon that which I see to be truest. You will one day have to live by the same rules; do not judge foolishly, Defender replied, now with a little bit of a growl in his voice. I realized that there was no way to convince Defender, or anyone else for that matter, that Low One was telling the truth. This book, in great detail, portrays the life of a male gray wolf named Leading One as he learns how a gray wolf in Yellowstone National Park is to live its life. Herein are described the animals lifestyle, breeding habits, feeding habits, etc., from birth to death, through the eyes of the animal itself.
