

Name Of The Game

My aim was to write a story that I would like to read....thought provoking as well as entertaining. It is difficult to ascribe it to a genre. Perhaps it is easier to say what it isn't - it's not fantasy, sci-fi, or romance. It involves crime but isn't really a whodunit (more of a who-dun-what). It's not a comedy but does, I hope, have humorous aspects. On its simplest level it is about a crime and its consequences. On another level it is about identity and the nature of identity. It involves wordplay, allusions, and name games. It is written in the first person and consequently everything is seen, rightly or wrongly, through the eyes of the narrator. The narrator is less than revelatory about themselves and the reader gradually comes to know them as the story unfolds. The name of the author James Gray is not my own, its significance becoming apparent in the final chapter. The story starts with a chance observation which develops into a mystery about the occupants of a house and what might be going on there. If I told you anymore, it would give the game away.
