

The Trans-Atomic Era #4: The Moon or Bust

The Trans-Atomic Era Episode 4: The Moon or Bust A terse, cryptic message from Stoney sends Sam and Horst in pursuit of the enemys elusive city-sized flying flagship. The message also accelerates President Roosevelts schedule for retaking Manhattan resulting in a rushed plan the new, hurriedly finished, completely untested American, British, and Nazi flying warships might not successfully implement against the enemys more experienced forces. In the end, it may be up to Dr. Dorothy Dot Lang, the brilliant young engineer behind Stonehaven Industries revolutionary Jetpack, and her newly recruited team of Army Aviators to save the day. However this first foray out of her lab and into actual combat will test her in ways complex design problems never had. Meanwhile, Stoney is still being held captive by the Empress of the Sky. They are aboard the Empress personal rocketship on their way to her secret moonbase where the Empress will deliver a revelation that turns everything Stoney thought she knew on its head. The dangers to America and the rest of the world may be far greater and far stranger than she ever imagined. Authors Note I have always loved the classic Golden Age style of Science Fiction where the main characters were heroes, the storylines were fun and upbeat, and Big Science was optimistically used to solve problems rather than cause them. I have a hard time finding very many people writing in this style these days, so I decided to do my own adventure in this old school style. This series is inspired in part by the old Republic movie serials King of the Rocket Men, Radar Men from the Moon, and Zombies of the Stratosphere and uses some similar technological devices like rocket planes and jetpacks. I have moved the time frame from the early 1950s to 1936 because I thought adding Nazis to the mix would be fun. (Hmm, should Nazis and fun really be used in the same sentence?) In keeping with the movie serial concept, where each episode ran about ten minutes and ended with a cliffhanger, I have decided to do something similar here. Each episode of this story runs about 100 pages and ends in some kind of a cliffhanger. As I was writing these episodes, I began to realize I really like this format. It seems like lately I have been buying lots of books that run 400-500 pages, but a lot of that just feels like filler. Frequently, I end up getting bored and give up after only reading the first 100-150 pages. However with this format, I am forced to come up with something interesting every 100 pages to convince the reader to stick with the story for another episode so the story is forced to move along at a brisk pace. Hopefully readers will come to like this style, too. Have a great day, Duane Special Note: These ebooks do NOT have DRM. Hopefully this will help if you need to convert the file to ePUB or some other format to be compatible with your preferred reader.
