

The Scarlet Bastards: A Company Soldier

Breathe deeply, jawan, for it shall be your last. Spring 2098 - Alexander Armstrong, a weak chinned, hollow chested teenager from the Okanagan Valley in British Columbia, looked upon the snowy tundra of Samsara, the United Nations colony some 20 light years from Earth, and all he could see was his doom. He was a foolish runaway seeking adventure in the United Nations Off-World Legion; the dreams of camaraderie in the rough with just enough danger to end the tedium of his future as planned by his parents, but the colonists and the jawan soldiers of the Legion changed that. The Tongs of the Black Hand that held the beach he and the Legion assaulted from a trio of paddlewheelers; the saurian looking Gliesiun refugees that he and their champion, a prospector named Fremantle Freya, led to attack on the Tongs that hunted them; and the Sindhi pirate that threatened to cut his throat. Alexander, soon to be called Sikunder, endured them, the rough ministrations of his comrades, and much else though always in the shadow of his decuria leader, Subedar Angus Motshegwa, better known in the Legion as MacShaka the Tartan Zulu.
