

Voyage of the Millennium

The Earth is experiencing strange weather patterns that some attribute to global warming. There are droughts all over the world. A big chunk of the Antarctic ice shelf has broken off, frozen tundra is thawing in the Arctic and rising sea levels inundate islands and land adjacent to the seas. Many animals are becoming extinct. Scientists predict imminent catastrophic conditions. In a desperate effort to save the environment, Daniel teams up with a dozen other qualified volunteers to transport samples of living organisms into the thirty-first century. To rebuild the ecology, they plan to reintroduce plant and animal life. If their venture to the future is successful, what will they find? Nobody knows what Earth will be like in the next millennium. Will there be a civilization or will we too become extinct after one thousand years? Will the climate support present day animal and plant life? What obstacles will they encounter?
